How it works

Issues come in two varieties - bugs and features.

You can create new issue tickets for bugs you've come across or if there already exists an issue for that specific bug, you can upvote that issue to signify that you've come across it too.

If you've thought of a feature that you'd like implemented in our application, create a new feature request issue describing it. You can also upvote other user's feature requests to signify that you too would like to see them implemented.

Our development time is spent on the bugs and features with the highest priority(the highest number of upvotes). Each user can upvote a specific bug ticket only once and a feature request an unlimited amout of times.

We promise to spend 50% of our time developing new features. In order to do that, each time a feature request is upvoted, it costs money.

We offer full transparency of our work in real-time.
